Dear Bob,

It was good to hear from you, and your supportive remarks are most appreciated.

By all means, feel free to contact my Curator of the Historical Intelligence Collection in regard to your research efforts. As you may recall, the Collection is administered by just the Curator and one library assistant, so we are not prepared to perform research for you. Similarly, because of security access limitations, on-site use of the Collection by external researchers is not possible.

However, the Curator advises me that he would be most willing to discuss your project and could perhaps provide some bibliographic support. He notes that all the unclassified works in the Collection are available through established inter-library loan arrangements with community and university libraries, and you should have no difficulty in obtaining any book from the Collection which you require for your research. He has also indicated to me that he would be willing to recommend the names of two former employees familiar with the topic of your research, who might be willing to share their thoughts on it with you.
